AT WAR WITH OUR WORLD

WE MUST ACT NOW.
WE ARE DESTROYING THE PLANET.
WE ARE AT WAR WITH OUR WORLD.

An audio experience like no other. At War With Our World takes you on a journey throughout a world where climate change is a prominent force against the preservation of this planet we call our home. Supported by a series of interviews with Greenpeace Activist Meg Allin and Wildlife Conservationist Nicholas Roberts from the UWE, we aim to take you on an immersive journey where climate change has engulfed our world into the derelict planet it is inevitably heading towards.

ONE PAGE OUTLINE

"At War with Our World" is an immersive audio experience based around the effects of Climate Change. The entire project is assembled through multiple mediums, that express views on climate change through 360 audio, poetry and informative discussions surrounding how people can do their bit in the fight against our Climate Change. The project itself starts with a series of snippets from important world figures, outlining opinions guided by a Brian Eno inspired instrumental. The introduction is then distorted which then transmits you to the amazon rainforest, where sound design and foley has been used to create an immersive world where trees, shelters and animals are being destroyed. This is guided by a powerful spoken word poem by Craig Santos Perez, detailing a love story between man and the world. The experience abruptly ends after the final tree has been cut down, which leads you to an interview with Greenpeace representative Meg Allin and Wildlife Conservationist Nicholas Roberts from the University of West England. As passionate as this project is, it intends to take the focus away from preaching and reiterating what we have all been told for the past 20 years about climate change. But instead the focus will be about provoking an emotional response from the listener, as they are guided through a sonically beautiful experience that turns your focus to the harsh realities of Climate Change.
