WELCOME

A warm welcome to the Solent Learning and Teaching Community Conference 2019 (SLTCC 2019). This year's conference will build on the success of last year's excellent event where we saw just shy of 300 delegates investigating how they could embed best practice in their curriculum, as we introduced Solent's real-world curriculum framework.

SLTCC 2019 will explore ways of maintaining creativity and innovation in universities when we're faced with so much change. This will continue to be a top priority throughout the coming years as Solent strives to be the best it can.

The day will consist of over 50 presentations, celebrating innovative practice and designed to engage, include and inspire creativity amongst the delegates. There will also be time to network, so why not go and speak to presenters and get to know people around and outside Solent? This year's programme captures the process at the heart of Solent's mission to transform lives.

I hope that the topics we explore at SLTCC 2019 leave you inspired, encouraged and enthusiastic about Solent's future and in particular our learning and teaching practices.

Professor Graham Baldwin
Vice-Chancellor
Solent University

INTRODUCTION

As a continuation of last year's fantastic conference on best practice in curriculum, let's be inspired by our colleagues and think about how we can be creative and innovative in our practice. Solent wants its students to have the best possible start to their academic ventures, and what better way to do that than by making learning fun again? We want our students to be engaged and included in their learning journey so that they can continue to become strong and thriving members of society. All of this comes when change is inevitable, triggered by the uncertainty that exists in the sector.

Let's make SLTCC 2019 a day that inspires creativity, embraces new ideas and encourages collaborative approaches to learning and teaching. With keynotes, teachers and supporters of learning from different disciplines and institutions showcasing their best practice, it is sure to be a brilliant day to celebrate our pedagogic diversity and support systems, to learn from each other, and to be inspired.

KEYNOTE SPEAKERS

DR SIMON USHERWOOD

Dr Simon Usherwood is Reader in Politics at the Department of Politics, University of Surrey. His research has focused on euroscepticism, UK-EU relations, and more recently the UK's withdrawal from the EU. He publishes widely on these subjects, both in academic journals and in formats for the general public, and is currently Deputy Director of the UK in a Changing Europe programme, which provides evidence-led, impartial contributions to the British debate on the relationship with the EU. He is also very active in pedagogical circles, with his work on simulation games and active learning, including the Active Learning in Political Science blog. This has led to research publications, consultancy work for colleagues in universities in the UK, Europe and beyond, and the award of National Teaching Fellow from the Higher Education Academy.

KEYNOTE: WHAT'S THE WORST THAT CAN HAPPEN?

My experience as a teacher and as a facilitator has taught me that embracing uncertainty is one of the most rewarding things you can do with your students. Entering a classroom and not being entirely sure how it will turn out when I try something new keeps me on my toes, draws students into the activity and opens up new ways of looking at things that I'd not seen before. As someone whose research area is the politics of Brexit, I appreciate that uncertainty can also go too far, but the lesson still stands: being willing to become part of the classroom rather than the centre of it brings multiple benefits to all involved, and without undue cost. In this talk, I'll try to set this all out, although I'm unsure about how it'll go.

SARAH KNIGHT

Sarah is Head of Change: Student Experience at Jisc. She manages the teams supporting the digital experience insights service, which is researching staff and students' expectations and experiences of the digital environment, and the team who are developing Jisc's building digital capability service to support the development of staff and student digital capabilities.

Sarah has established the Change Agents' Network (CAN), a national network to support staff-student partnership working on curriculum innovation projects. She also established and runs the Jisc Student Experience Experts Group, an active community of practice, which provides valuable consultation and dissemination opportunities for Jisc.

Sarah has worked for Jisc for 15 years and during her time there has led large transformation projects on curriculum design, digital literacies and learners' experiences of technology. Sarah has a master's of science in chemistry and is a certified member of the Association of Learning Technology (CMALT).

KEYNOTE: DIGITAL SKILLS FOR TOMORROW'S WORLD

With a UK government expectation that by 2037, 90% of all jobs will require some element of digital skills (Skills Funding Agency, 2016), there is an acknowledged need to invest in building digital know-how (Beetham, 2015), capability and resilience. Yet national reports show a mismatch between the skills employers need (both now and in the future) and the preparedness of the workforce to meet or rise to these demands. The government's report on Digital Skills for the UK Economy (ECORYS UK, 2016) found that 72% of large firms were suffering a shortage of high-tech labour, and pointed to the "challenges in matching the speed of change in the education sector... to the rapidly changing skill sets needs in the economy and society." The UK is falling behind many other Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD) countries when it comes to young people's digital literacy (OECD, 2016) and we still have a way to go before staff in UK colleges and universities have the required skills to meet these challenges.

Jisc has been tackling these challenges since 2008 through research and investigations to better understand and support the development of digital capability for students and staff – the skills needed to live, learn and work in a digital society (Jisc, 2014).

My presentation will offer an overview of our research and how Jisc is supporting institutions who are developing the digital capabilities of their staff and students in the UK context.

SEED FUNDING 2019/20

Creating a culture of evidence-led practice with seed funding for learning and teaching research

Staff involved in learning and teaching across the University are invited to submit funding proposals for research and development projects.

The themes for seed projects are:

- Assessment and feedback
- Student engagement
- Teaching for diversity
- Technology-enhanced learning
- Research-informed teaching
- Creative pedagogies
- Curriculum

Funding for each LT project will be awarded up to £2,500. Please feel free to arrange a conversation about your project idea with SLTI colleagues – contact us at slti@solent.ac.uk to set up a meeting.

Key dates to follow. Keep an eye on the website for details, at:

www.solent.ac.uk/staff/learning-and-teaching/research-informed-teaching#seed

Please note: all applications must be accompanied by an approved ethics release checklist (ERC). If your ethics application needs to be submitted to the panel, approval may take up to two weeks – please factor this time into your submission, as seed funding applications cannot be accepted without an approved ERC. The ERC route for your research will depend on your subject and project design.
